A coalition of non-profits that provide human services released a report Wednesday seeking more state funding to help increase workers' wages in the field.

The group of non-profits, which held a bake sale in Albany, are asking for $112 million in this year's state budget — $100 million for infrastructure and $12 million to fund the minimum age increase.

“Most state human services contract have not been adjusted for rising for rising costs in many years,” the report says. “Reimbursement rates for many Medicaid-funded services have been adjusted to increase pay rates for workers, but the same cannot be said for must human services.”
